From our President

Hello all,

We are busy preparing for our 66th Annual Orchid Show and Sale. This year's theme is "Orchid Safari" and it promises to be a colorful event. I would like to thank everyone who participated in the preparations and hope that all members will come out and support our vendors. Our vendors support FWCOS by donating orchids for our annual spring auction, which is our main fundraiser.

The potting booth is where all the learning action happens, sort of like hangar flying. If you have any orchids that need to be repotted bring them to the potting booth where we will repot them for a small donation. We can always use more volunteers in the potting booth and many other areas on Saturday and Sunday, please see Brent Finke or Jennifer Upchurch if you can help out.

Blooming orchids for the displays can be brought in Friday morning or call Jennifer Upchurch 727-517-6460 and we will make arrangements for pick up on Thursday. If you are planning to come Thursday night to help set up tables you can bring your plant entries then.

Once the show is over, we need to start thinking about our Christmas pot luck dinner. There is always an activity coming up the society needs to prepare for in advance. We will start discussions about the holiday buffet at the next meeting in October. Once the holidays are over we start preparing for the Annual Orchid Auction fund raiser. Once the weather cools down in late October or early November we will start up the volunteer work days in the Botanical Gardens to pay off our "rent" to book our meeting room and equipment for the year 2013. Please don't forget to think about renewing your membership for the year 2012, please see Tina Kendall at the membership table during our monthly meetings.

See you all at the show & Happy Growing,
Cheryl

About our Featured Speaker

Ernie Gemeinhart is the owner of EnLightened Orchids and an accredited AOS judge at the Florida North Central Judging Center. Working as a laboratory manager for the NanoScience Technology Center and Advanced Materials Processing and Analysis Center labs at the University of Central Florida pays the bills, puts food on the table, and keeps orchids on the benches. Ernie travels extensively lecturing on many topics including growing under fluorescent lights, semi-hydroponics and paphiopedilums among other topics. His son Logan routinely helps repot and water plants in semi-hydro with great efficiency. Yes, even a four-year-old can grow with semi-hydroponics!

From the Membership Chairwoman

We would like to welcome the following new members to the Florida West Coast Orchid Society:

Charles Weckerle & Elizabeth Morse, Patti Kreider,

Dan Lydon & Sherri Harvester, and Doug Chenneville

all from St. Petersburg. I will have temporary name badges for new members available at the membership table and any member new or old may purchase a magnetic name badge at our actual cost of $10, please see me at the membership table if interested and I will order one for you. Don't forget to get your free raffle ticket for an orchid just for wearing your name badge. You can also get a raffle ticket for bringing food for the break. It is time to start collecting membership renewals for 2012. You can beat the holiday rush and renew at the October or November meetings. Thank you to those who have already paid their dues for 2012.

Tina.

Sunken Gardens Encyclia Tampensis Restoration Project

The FWCOS Sunken Gardens Encyclia Tampensis Restoration Project is an on-going effort led by Bill Nunez of a group of FWCOS volunteers to re-populate the Sunken Gardens of St Petersburg with Florida native Encyclia tampensis grown by the group from seed. They started in January 2009 by flasking a large quantity of Enc. Tampensis that were then taken home by members to be cared for until they were ready to be de-flasked and planted into compots. These original flasks are now at the stage of being removed from compots and mounted individually.

Above is a photo of Enc. tampensis recently removed from compot and mounted on small pieces of cedar with osmunda cushions. When these plants have established on their mounts they will be mounted by the volunteers high in the live oaks of Sunken Gardens where they will be safe from pilfering.

These plants should be ready for installation at the Gardens next spring

The group has continued flasking and compotting and today they have many flasks and compots as well as the small mounted plants in many different stages of growth for future use. Bill says they probably have enough plants of Enc. tampensis at this point to re-populate the entire state of Florida. In June of 2009 the FWCOS group installed the first group of plants in the live oaks of Sunken Gardens that had been started by Bill several years earlier. The photo at right, taken in April shows these plants are now thriving in their natural habitat.

Paphiopedilum Jogjae

A while ago I was fortunate to acquire a few more issues of the Orchid Digest publication. On the front page of one of these books, there is a picture of Paphiopedilum Jogjae. It has several flowers on the stem, the tall yellow dorsal has brown stripes, the petals are twisted and hairy, green with brown spots and stripes and the pouch is rosy pink. It looks like a much improved Paph. chamberlainianum. From the information printed for this photograph, I learned a few interesting things. And just to be able to tell you about this plant, I did more research. Here is what I found:

As you probably know, the Netherlands had colonized the East Indies way back in the 17th century and had settled throughout Indonesia and Western New Guinea (now Irian Jaya). Many natives from that region also held Dutch passports and received their higher education in the Netherlands. After WWII was over and the Japanese troops had returned home, the Dutch Queen promised to grant Indonesia and Dutch New Guinea their independence by the year 1949. But there were many impatient people who would not wait that long and with support from the U.S., Mr. Sukarno ousted everyone who held a Dutch passport, around 1947. The Netherlands had to accommodate a lot of people in a hurry. The sad thing was that these ousted people had to leave EVERYTHING behind and according to my source, they also never received any compensation.

Now let us go back to Jogjakarta around the 1900s. There are so many beautiful plants growing in delightful surroundings. Of course, there are also lots of orchids. We know that the collecting, growing and hybridizing of orchids was rather fashionable, even then. How much simpler it must be to grow tropical species right in your garden! Not only species but hybrids as well would thrive under such congenial conditions. Many primary hybrids were registered during those years – I am certain that some of them were made right in their native lands. For example, a cross between Paph. glaucophyllum from Java and Paph. praestans from New Guinea was registered by W. van de Venter as Paph. Jogjae; it commemorates the lovely city of Jogjakarta in Java. What do you think happened to all these 'captive' plants after their owners were made to leave? Their houses were either burned or left to decay; the gardens neglected and all those treasured plants, the orchids and the newly created hybrids were left to live on their own. It seems they did this very well because more than 40 years later, plant hunters from the West found these 'wild' growing orchids. The collectors were not aware that one particular hybrid growing wild had already been registered with the R.H.S in 1927. Thus Paph. Jogjae was newly introduced to orchid growers as... Paph. yapiantum! It took a while before better informed orchidists realized what had happened there. I wonder how many other plants come into our collections with 'new' names.

When one remembers how many explorers, traders, missionaries, officials and just plain travellers had been to and lived in these far-away places, it is tempting to speculate: what plants had these people grown? There must also be natives who enjoyed having orchids in their gardens. Were any of them successful, like Mr. van de Venter, in raising new hybrids? Who knows?
